CAPT. C. B. HUMPHRE

A Denver dispatch says of an officer formerly stationed here as post quartermaster:

Captain C. B. Humphrey of the Twenty-first infantry regiment, stationed at Fort Logan, aided by Nathan Williams, a negro, succeeded this mornng in flooring four prize fighters, a at bay a mob of hangers-on. As a result of the battle Captain Humphrey is under a surgeon's care and his face

Captain Humphrey and a party of women were on the way from the fort to the city on a train which was halted and boarded at a resort five miles outside of Denver, where a series of prize fights had been held the night before. The pugilists and their following tried to force their way into the car. When refused admission the leaders used abusive language and this put the captain on his mettle. He knocked down the nearest one, struck the next off the platform and had another down when a general rush was made for him. Then it was that the negro, a passenger, went to the officer's assistance. TENYO MARU'S ESCAPE.

On January 24 the launching took place at Nagasaki of the Kitano Maru, now being built at the Mitsu Bishi Yard for the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. Owing to a slight hitch in the launching process a serious disaster was narrowly averted. At 9 a. m. the rope was cut and the stays were removed, but the vessel remained fast. While MISSOURIAN to sailAPRIL 15 strenuous efforts were being made to move the vessel, the T. K. K. steamer Tenyo Maru, which was due at Nagasaki that day, came into sight. Great excitement was caused by the fear that she might be struck by the vessel being launched, as the incoming steamer was approaching rapidly and soon came abreast the ways which the Kitang Maru was to run down. She had only just cleared when the Kitang Maru, which had stuck on the slips for about twenty minutes, suddenly began to move and glided down into the water, crossing the track of the Tenvo Maru just two minutes after the latter had passed. The cheers of the spectators were interspersed with sighs of relief at the escape from disaster .--Manila Times.
